Q19: [SPLIT A] To fund land-grant universities, the United States took nearly 11 million acres of land from Native American tribes through violence and land theft. In the Morrill Acts of 1862 and 1890 the federal government granted this land to states to sell to pay for creating new colleges. Many of these colleges continue today as some of our country's largest state universities and elite private colleges. Q25: [SPLIT A] Starting in the late 1800s and running through the 1970s, the federal government and religious groups took Native American children from their families and put them in boarding schools to force them to assimilate into American culture and reject their own cultural identities. These children were not allowed to speak in their native languages or practice their own beliefs. Many Native American children died or were physically and sexually abused. United States Secretary of the Interior Deb Haaland has launched a comprehensive review of the troubled legacy of federal boarding school policies to better understand the trauma boarding schools generated across generations of Native Americans. Were you already aware about the history of Native American children being taken from their families and forced to attend boarding schools, or is this the first time you have heard about this?
