Q22: [SPLIT A] In the United States, violence against Native American women is higher than violence against women in all other racial and ethnic groups. In fact, 85% of Native American women report experiencing violence including sexual assault, domestic violence, and rape over the course of their lifetime and Native American women are three times more likely to be murdered than White women. Did you already know about high levels of violence against Native American women, or is this the first time you have heard about this?

Q25: [SPLIT A] Starting in the late 1800s and running through the 1970s, the federal government and religious groups took Native American children from their families and put them in boarding schools to force them to assimilate into American culture and reject their own cultural identities. These children were not allowed to speak in their native languages or practice their own beliefs. Many Native American children died or were physically and sexually abused. United States Secretary of the Interior Deb Haaland has launched a comprehensive review of the troubled legacy of federal boarding school policies to better understand the trauma boarding schools generated across generations of Native Americans. Were you already aware about the history of Native American children being taken from their families and forced to attend boarding schools, or is this the first time you have heard about this?
